The next president is determined not by the votes but by what happens in the Iraq war.

The original plan for Iraq was for Bush to lose to Sadr, if they want to continue with that the next president would have to be a neo-conservative (or it should happen within the next few months) but since the plan has been failing and they dont want the Sunni fundamentalists to be seen as the victors they will have to stop the war as a "merciful" act of a democratic president.

I think Iran will eventually move their forces to Iraq especially if and when Obama pulls the troops out, in order to prevent the Sunnis from taking over.

I dont gain much from writing these stuff on Forums, but that's not all I do and I only try to talk about things Im really interested in. It's fun being right all the time (hehehe), but do I hope Im right again? ...well not sure about that.

His strategist Axelrod is a Jew and most of the showbiz's Jewish bigwigs are behind his cause! what gives? Who in the US politics can avoid Zionist cause and survive?

Yes exactly, by claiming that the Zionists oppose Obama, Iran is in fact spreading Zionist propaganda while pretending to oppose them (this is what they always do).

Bush and Obama are 11th cousins:

http://www.nypost.com/seven/10282007/news/nationalnews/cousins_by_dozens.htm

The fact that a lot of these famous people were related (there's many more than the ones in the above picture) was revealed on a number of sources some years back and then the people involved in this family business were all of a sudden like "wow, we're really related? we didn't know!" (yeah right!)

I suppose you're implying that by this extremely tenuous connection, Barak Obama in some way shares an interest in the welfare of the Bush family?

Now THAT'S stretching it.

The fascinating fact about Geneology is you can connect people. My church is famous for their geneological work.

Did you know that Brooke Shields is a descendant of the Prophet Muhammed (pbuh)?

I think it's wonderful that we can connect to our ancestors by geneology. Didn't know about Brooke Shields though. Now that is interesting.

Because of the easy access to records, my family has discovered many delightful tit bits regarding our family tree. A distant relative was artificial leg maker to one of the British Kings in the 18th century. The Grossmith's also had a successful perfume company in the 19th-20th century. Two other Grossmiths were famous actors in the 19th century, and wrote and illustrated 'The Diary of A Nobody', and worked closely with Gilbert and Sullivan. There have since been other famous family members, and totally insignificant trivia to non-family members, but my point is how interesting it becomes to an individual searching their roots. Our family tree only goes back to the early 1700's, but is there for future generations. And we have The CHurch of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to thank for most of this information. The records they hold are accessible to everyone, should they wish to research their family history. I would definately endorse it.

some of us are a lot like cement:- all mixed up and permanently set

Angela, thanks to the work of your church, the Spanish are gradually documenting their geneology and storing it.

Undoubtedly, it would never have occurred to us to do this on our own!

But my point is, that uniting politicians or famous people by their tenuous geneological links doesn't prove they are 'royal', 'blessed', 'illuminati', or anything else.

I believe we are all related in a more significant sense than trying to claim some sort of 'specialness' by virtue of who our great-great-great-great-great-great-etc., grandfather impregnated, accidentally or otherwise....
